Marjorie Winters, a freelance medical writer and editor heads Winters Editorial Services. She received her BA from UCONN (1963) switching to a major in English from a mathematics major, having taken mathematics, statistics, and science courses. She went on to be a definer for a college dictionary and built her editing and writing skills through a series of editorial jobs that culminated in a full-time position as a clinical writer for Hoffmann-la Roche. During her writing and editorial “training years” and subsequent positions, she worked as a medical writer for other big pharmas, CROs, and as a free-lance editor and writer of peer-reviewed medical articles and allied topics. Documents she wrote or edited included IBs, protocols, clinical Statistical Reports, regulatory agency responses, manuscripts, abstracts, medical professionals and salesforce communications. She joined the Empire State-New York Metropolitan (NY) Chapter of AMWA at the recommendation of her manager at Hoffmann-la Roche. Her volunteer history with AMWA includes serving on the Executive Board as secretary and on the Program Committee; co-chair of the programming committee, and other tasks. At the AMWA national level, Ms Winters served several times as Roundtable Leader, member of the Education Committee, and currently as a member of the “Communications Committee.” She was delighted to be honored to as an AMWA Fellow in 2018, and plans to continue her service to the AMWA community.
